

Dušan Nolimal, MD, MSPH

Finished medical school at University of Ljubljana School of Medicine, Ljubljana, Slovenia, in 1981 and earning a Master's in Science of Public Health at University of Zagreb School of Medicine in 1987. He subspecialized in addiction medicine at Colorado University Health Science Centre, Addiction Research and Treatment Services, Denver, Colorado, USA and at National Institute on Drug Abuse, Addiction Research Centre, and Baltimore, Maryland, USA in 1986 – 1990. As the Permanent Correspondent of Slovenia in The Pompidou Group (Council of Europe) and the World Health Organization's Slovenian National Coordinator for Drug Problems he contributed considerably to European drug policies and research by promoting the evidence base of policy and addressing ethical and human rights aspects. He was involved in developing and passing state legislation on drug prevention and treatment of addictions. As a member of the EU Science Group of European Alcohol and Health forum he provides scientific advice and guidance on matters of alcohol-related harms and developing and maintaining a common evidence base at EU level. His current work has spanned a diverse range of topics, including addictions in alcohol and other drugs, health and social care for vulnerable populations, ethical and human rights aspects of public health, patients' rights, promotion of mental health at workplaces and social responsibility at workplaces. His research focuses on social, economic, political and environmental determinants of public health conditions, in particularly the determinants of psychosocial health and social responsibility at workplaces. He is author and/or co-author of more than 300 scientific articles, books, editor or co-editor of different publications in the field of public health (social medicine) in Slovenia. He often speaks nationally on the sensitive public health topic and social responsibility is frequently quoted in the media.